What is VRI?

Video Remote Interpreting (VRI) allows interpreters to provide interpreting services over the internet. With VRI, an interpreter can be broadcast through the internet to any location where there is a need for sign language interpreting services. Typically, the deaf person and the hearing person are in the same room. The benefits of using VRI are many and include convenience, on-demand availability, scheduling flexibility and reduced costs.

Interpretype VRI Subscription Service is useful in rural venues such as; colleges, courts, medical environments and remote offices. Often there are not enough interpreters to meet the demand at a given time in a given area. Interpretype VRI can mobilize resources to meet the needs of your students, clients, patients or consumers. The use of VRI will satisfy ADA and Section 508 requirements by providing qualified and affordable communication access.

VRI should not be confused with Video Relay Services (VRS) which is free to users and concentrates solely on making and receiving phone calls through the use of similar technology.

What is Interpretype?

Interpretype is a company dedicated to technological solutions that provide access to conversations for people with communication disabilities. The first Interpretype device, known as an ITY for short, was invented in 2002. Since then, ITY systems have evolved to utilize the latest technologies offering state of the art communication access.

Interpretype VRI can be used almost anywhere. Common applications include hospitals, doctor's offices, law firms, banks, classrooms, service counters, police departments and large corporations. Interpretype VRI helps meet ADA and Section 508 requirements and provides "Universal Access to Conversation."
